When it comes to organ transplants, a doctor's desire to do what's best for his patient can end up hurting someone else's patient

She's got a tracheostomy tube in her neck, so she can only mouth out words - words her mom then repeats for her

They all feel as confident as they can

Ashley has no words for her mom at this point, mouthed or texted. She just sits back and continues waiting

She desperately wants Ashley to get lungs, and she also wants that for her 123 other patients

Either gunshot wounds to the head, that sort of thing; or strokes or bleeding

Consider the story of what happened with liver transplants

Before 2002, to determine which liver patients were the sickest, they would measure people's blood

I guess there is room for you to put everybody you have on 100 percent oxygen, and tell them to walk less - because that will increase the score

The reason why is, we're audited very closely
